EPIISODE IV A NEW HOPE

It is a period of great upheaval. Render farms grow restless.

Across a galaxy of weary artists at every level yearn for a workstation that does not fall over at 2 a.m. during finals.

A small band of contributors, scattered across far-flung time zones, has discovered something powerful enough to bring stability to the entire sector: a community.

You Don't Have to Be a Jedi

The ground keeps shifting.

AlmaLinux is the stable ground

A glowing blue comet streak, resembling a meteor or a comet tail, curves upwards from the bottom right corner of the slide. It has a bright, irregular blue core that tapers into a long, wispy trail of smaller blue dots and fainter blue lines as it moves towards the top left.

You Don't Have to Be a Jedi

Students and freelancers welcome. There is no entrance exam to fail.

It takes a whole crew.

Four ways in

Pilots

Run it. Tell us what breaks.

Engineers & mechanics

Package it. Automate it. Ship your own image.

The archives

No code required. Seriously.

Operators

Harden it. Watch it. Keep it up.

AlmaLinux is owned by the people who use it.

You own the ground for your infrastructure... if you show up.

You only have to do one small thing.

One bug report. One doc fix. One answer in chat. One test on your weird hardware.

That's how you get started

Your mission

Before you leave this building:

Join `~sig-media-entertainment`
on `chat.almalinux.org`

Introduce yourself. The people who greet you are the ones who spoke today.

Also: `media-entertainment-sig@lists.almalinux.org`

Monthly meeting: first Wednesday, 16:00 UTC, open to all.

No Jedi were required in the making of this community.

You don't have to be one either.
